XV. Taxes Equipment Used by Contractors

Under the law, persons selling or leasing construction equipment may not accept resale or exemption certificates from contractors claiming tax exemptions on construction equipment. The sales tax law requires contractors to pay tax on their equipment regardless of whether it is purchased or rented.

A contractor is the consumer of all equipment used in performing contracts to improve real property. Even a contractor performing the taxable service of repairing, restoring, or remodeling nonresidential real property is required to pay tax when purchasing or renting any equipment used to perform the service. A contractor may not claim a resale exemption on this equipment.

Additionally, there is no exemption in the sales tax law for equipment used by a contractor who is performing contracts to improve real property for exempt entities. This is true regardless of the type of exempt entity (e.g., federal government, state or local government, school districts, charitable hospital, or church.) A contractor performing a contract for a direct payment permit holder may not claim an exemption for equipment used in performing the contract. The contractor should pay tax on the purchase or rental of the equipment and not give the equipment company an exemption certificate, unless the contractor has a Texas direct payment permit.
